THE LONG LANE.—The troupe played to a fair audience last night, and those who attended considered themselves amply repaid. The long lane extended in the rear of the Opera House some distance, and the effect of the scene was striking. A MOUNT BLANC ELEVATOR.

The Plan Devised by a Comstock Engineer.

A civil mining engineer who once worked on the Comstock but now in Europe, has undertaken a scheme to transport tourists to the top of Mt. Blanc by elevator. The project is one of the most startling on first sight that has been brought before the world in recent years and yet its simplicity, feasibility and obviousness are such that the only wonder is that it has not long since been put into actual operation. The finest view in Europe and possibly the most interesting view in the world is that from the summit of Mt. Blanc, but the number of people who are privileged to gaze upon this view in any one year is to be counted upon the fingers. It can only be enjoyed by those who, first, are vigorous and practical climbers, and second, are possessed of means to stand the heavy expenses of the ascent from Chomoni.

The engineer's plans are now perfected down to the last detail. He is prepared with drawings even of all the machinery and apparatus requisite to carry it into effect. Very naturally this engineer was led in the first instance to study this subject by familiarity with the deepest mines and heaviest mining machinery in the world of the famous Comstock. They suggested the idea that a shaft raised from a convenient level to the surface of Mt. Blanc would be capable of transporting several thousand people a day. The shaft need not be constructed by sinking from its mouth downward. It can be more expeditiously and conveniently raised from its bottom to the mouth. The Mt. Blanc shaft is projected to be composed of eight compartments, each six feet square in the clear, each to carry a three-story triple-decked elevator, duly equipped with safety clutches, raised by a mining flat steel wire, or ribbon rope, winding on friction geared drums. The total section of the excavation would thus be 30x16 feet, equal to 53 1-2 cubic yards per foot of rise. Each cage would carry 27 passengers to each trip. Stations would be cut out at eligible points, giving access to the surface of the mountain. These points would be selected with special reference to the qualities of the views they should command.

Engines similar to those used on the Comstock for the last ten years will be adopted to supply the motive power.

The Inventors Here.

The following is clipped from the Tamaqua Courier, published in Philadelphia:

The genius that will invent a gas burner that will not let the gas escape when the light is blown out will do a great deal of good in the world. Such an arrangement is needed everywhere. The people who blow out the gas instead of turning it off fill up a great many holes in the ground.

The very article called for has been invented and patented by two mechanics in this city—A. Frechette and Pete Dupuis. It is automatic, and within one minute after the gas is blown out the flow ceases and no danger is connected with a mistake of this kind.

Patent rights have been obtained in different countries, and the manufacture of the burners will commence as soon as possible.
